Confessions can be of two kinds: confessions of faith and confessions of failure. Bryan Magee's vividly written intellectual autobiography has the character of both. His convictions make for exhilarating reading; but his failure to find in philosophy a reliable answer to his deepest concerns casts a shadow over the book, which darkens in the last chapter to a tormented despondency.

I finished Bryan Magee's Confessions of a Philosopher. I thought that it would be more juicy, like Feyerabend's autobiography, more personal with lots of pain and suffering. Instead it's very long but a veritable tour through philosophy, with the 20th century British logical positivists taking an especially strong hit.
