Koestler The Ghost In The

The Ghost in the Machine is a 1967 book about philosophical psychology by Arthur Koestler. The title is a phrase (see ghost in the machine) coined by the Oxford philosopher Gilbert Ryle to describe the Cartesian dualist account of the mind-body relationship. Koestler shares with Ryle the view that the mind of a person is not an independent non-material entity, temporarily inhabiting and governing the body.

Arthur Koestler wrote literature and fiction in nineteen forties and early nineteen fifties. In late fifties he turned to science. In "The Ghost in the Machine" he concludes, and I feel he does so without much conviction, that the human race, owing to some faults/defects during evolution, may be marching to its early end.

The Ghost in the Machine by Arthur Koestler

Koestler replaces the mind-body dualism of this "ghost in a machine" with a multi-level hierarchy where consciousness is a matter of degree rather than being on-or-off, and where the shift from autonomous mechanical behavior to mindful behavior (as when one confronts the unpredictable) is the source of one's perceived experience of free will and the idea or sense that our mind has an existence outside of the body.
